The Moulton Coat of Arms

THE MOULTON FAMILY

THE Moultons of this country are of English origin. We find the name in the various forms—Multon, Muleton, Molton, Moleton, Moulson and Moulton. The similiarity becomes apparent in the pronunciation of Multon with the long vowel sound, i. e. Moolton. The family is probably of Norman descent. The earliest of the name of whom record is found was Thomas Multon, or De Multon, stated in the Domesday Book made by order of the Norman William in 1086 to have been put in possession of an estate called "Galeshore." Later another Thomas Multon, or Moulton, of mixed Norman and Saxon descent, a resident of Gillesland in Cumberland, called also in French De Vaux, was an attendant of Richard I in his crusading wars and appears prominently in Scott's tale of the Talisman.* The name of still another Thomas appears on the Magna Charta granted by King John in 1215. In 1290 Roger was warden of St. Julian's Hospital in Southhampshire. The claim of descent from these early families, though traditional, receives support from the general similiarity of the Multon coats of arms with that of the Moultons given here.* Whatever the original Moultons may have been, the lapse of five centuries which blended Norman, Saxon Dane, and Briton into a common nationality, made them Englishmen, and the family in the seventeenth century seem to have been composed largely of husbandmen with a decided sprinkling of those who followed the sea. It is a fact, as Disraeli once told the House of Lords in caustic language, that the descendents of the old families are now to be found, with but few exceptions, among the commoners.

Robert Moulton was in the Royal Navy in 1636, and he and his sons, James and Robert Jr., still held commands under Parliament after the death of Charles I. No less than five captains by the name of Moulton appear on the register of the navy at about that time.

The name is common in the counties Lincoln, Yorkshire, Gloucestershire, Kent, Devonshire, Norfolk and London. In these counties Puritanism had its stronghold and the emigrant Moultons were evidently of that faith. They came to America with the great emigration during the time of Charles I prior to the meeting of the Long Parliament. In those years more than twenty thousand Englishmen, oppressed for conscience sake, left their homes and came to the New England wilderness. These emigrants, says Green in his History of the English People, "were not like the earlier colonists of the south, broken men, adventurers . . . or simply poor men . . . The bulk were God-fearing farmers from Lincolnshire and the eastern counties. They desired 'only the best' as sharers in their enterprise."

*The Moulton coat of arms here given is a fac simile of that in possession of Henry W. Moulton, Esq., of Newburyport, Mass. This he copied from an ancient parchment owned by a descendent of Thomas Moulton, the emigrant, living in York, Maine, and which has been handed down in the family. The motto is not legible. It accords exactly with a description given in Burke's General Armory, viz. "Moulton (Gloucestershire, Kent, London and Yorkshire, granted 1571). Ar. three bars gu. between three bars sa. three, two, two and one. Crest: on a pellet a falcon rising ar." The arms of Thomas Multon as given by Burke are: "Moulton or Multon (Baron of Gillesand temp. Edw. 1) ar. three bars gu. a label of five points az."

The earliest settlers of the name in this country so far as can be learned were:

I. THOMAS, of Jamestown, Virginia, 1624-5. His name appears in the list of settlers made at that time, was then twenty-five years old, probably not married. It is not known that any descendents remain.

II. ROBERT, of Salem, Mass., 1629. Master Shipwright. Had grant of 200 acres of land from Salem. He lived in Charlestown, at one time, where the navy yard now is and had a house there. The place was called Moulton's Point. It was on this point that the British landed when they crossed from Boston to fight the battle of Bunker Hill. He filled various offices of trust and responsibility and died in 1635. His will is at the Clerk of Courts' office in Salem. Descendents in Lynn, Peabody, Western Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York and the West, also in Paris, France. Francis D. Moulton, Beechers "Mutual Friend" was of this family. John T. Moulton, Esq., of Lynn, a scholarly gentleman and member of the

New England Historical and Genealogical Society and of the Essex Institute of Salem, to whom I am much indebted for information about the earliest families, is also a descendant.

III. JAMES, of Salem, Mass., 1637, finally of Wenham, Mass. Freeman in 1637-8. The descendants of James remain in Beverly and Wenham. Some went to Conn. at an early day and to Rhode Island.

IV. THOMAS, of Charlestown, Mass., 1630. Had descendants for three or four generations and then the name seemed to die out.

V. THOMAS, of Newbury, Mass., then Hampton, N. H., 1638, finally of York, Me. Most of the York County Moultons are his descendants.

VI. JOHN, of Newbury, Mass., then Hampton, N. H., 1638. Has descendants in Porter, Standish, Deering and elsewhere in Maine.

VII. WILLIAM, of Newbury, Mass., finally of Hampton, N. H., 1639. Descendants numerous in N. H., Mass. and Me. The Moultons of Scarborough and Parsonsfield, Me. are mostly of this branch.

“That the family has not been wholly wanting in members of social and political influence and not limited as to numbers is evident from the fact that there are five parishes and two or more townships in England, one village in Lawrence Co., Ala., one post office in Lavaca Co., Texas, one in Shelby Co., Ill., one village or post office in Gonzales Co., Texas, one in Appanoosa Co., Iowa, one in Mo. and one township in Anglaize Co., O., called Moulton, one post office in Madison Co., Ill., and one in N. H. called Moultonville and one township in N. H. called Moultonborough.”

THE MOULTON FAMILY

Early Settlers in Massachusetts

ROBERT MOULTON was sent over in the fleet with Higginson to Salem in 1629, by the Home Company, with orders to commence ship building. There were seven other ship building carpenters in the fleet and during the first season they built three shallops on Salem Neck. (Found in History of Salem.)

Moulton had charge of the work. He soon removed to Charlestown where he was made freeman in 1631. He was one of the first selectmen of that town and was representative to the first General Court in 1634. He came back to Salem in 1637 and in that year was disarmed because he was a friend of Wheelwright, who was a father-in-law to Anne Hutchinson.

“Moulton did a large business, not only in ship carpentering, but also in exporting ship timber, for which purpose he cut off all the timber on Salem Neck pasture (Upham) and Goat Hill in Beverly, of which he had a deed.” (John I. Baker.)

He was at one time in partnership with Robert Baker, one of the ships' carpenters that came in the fleet with him. Baker owned Baker's Island and Moulton the Misery Island in Salem Harbor, (Tradition in Baker's family) formerly called Moulton's Misery because at an early date the ship and crew of the R. S. Rantoul were lost on it. Moulton's house in Salem, stood on the northern side of Essex St. where it joins Boston St., i. e. Buffum corner, and the site of the cellar can be seen in the garden of his descendant, Robert Buffum, of Upham.

He was the first deacon of the first church in Salem. He died in Wenham in 1665. (Annals of Salem.) In his will, which was probated Jan. 20, 1666, he mentioned his son Robert, daughter Dorothy Edwards and grandson Robert Buffum. He came from the eastern part of England.

THOMAS MOULTON with his wife Jane came to Charlestown in 1631. They had six children:

1. John, born 1633.
2. Martha, born 1634.
3. Hannah, born 1641.
4. Elizabeth, born 1642.
5. Jacob.
6. Mary.

JOHN MOULTON, husbandman of Newbury, came in April, 1634. He brought five children:

1. Henry.
2. Mary.
3. Annie.
4. Jane.
5. Bridget.

and two servants. In the ship with him came Widow Mary Moulton with two servants. One of them married Marriam Moulton; all were from Ornsby, Norfolk Co. near Great Yarmouth, England. John's age was 38, Mary's 38, Marriam's 23.

THE MOULTON FAMILY

THOMAS MOULTON, with wife Martha, were in Newbury in 1637 and removed to Hampton, N. H. the same year. Probably followed Wheelwright when he was banished. Children:

1. Thomas, born 1638.
2. Daniel, born 1641.

Most of the New Hampshire and Maine Moultons are supposed to have descended from this Thomas.

His descendant, General Moulton, bought a large tract of land at the head of Lake Winnipissogee and settled Moultonboro (Wm. S. Moulton.) It is supposed that Jeremiah Moulton, of York, Maine, was one of his younger sons. Jeremiah was born in 1650, was representative to General Court in 1692 and was afterwards one of the Governing Council. He died in 1727, aged 77.

WILLIAM MOULTON came in 1637, aged 20 years. He was a servant of Robert Page, of Ornsby, England and afterwards married his daughter Margaret.

JAMES MOULTON, brother of Robert and probably of the Charlestown Thomas. He was born in the eastern part of England in 1602. He married Mary—and had three children:

1. James, christened in Salem, Nov. 7, 1637.
2. Samuel, “ “ Oct. 25, 1642.
3. Mary or Marah, married James Friend, December 12, 1662.

FIRST GENERATION.

JAMES was admitted an inhabitant of Salem, June 7, 1637; made a freeman March, 1637. He joined the church in December of the same year. He was granted by the town of Salem, eighty acres of land, of which eight were to be meadow land, October 9th., 1639. In the same year he witnessed a deed of Sarah Scarlet. (Pro. Rec., 2:12.)

In a list of persons among whom the marsh and meadow lands were divided in 1640, his share was three-fourths of an acre, he having at that time a family of five persons. In 1646 he was in Wenham and was sworn as a constable. At the first town meeting held in Wenham, 1654, he was chosen Graineryman. In 1657 he paid the largest tax in Wenham. He was chosen deacon of the Wenham Church in 1674. His will was dated February 26th., 1678. Amount of estate, four hundred and fifty-six pounds; with one exception the largest in Wenham. He gave five pounds to Harvard College, five pounds to the Wenham Church and five pounds to Rev. Gerish, the pastor. (Rec. Ips. series 4:319.)

His home stood on the southern side of the road leading from Wenham to Topsfield, just west of the straits and near the hill that still bears his name. The house was torn down by Colonel Paul Porter in 1821.

SECOND GENERATION

JAMES MOULTON the Second, son of James First was christened in Salem, November 7, 1637; made a freeman September 11, 1665; went to Wenham with his father and died October 24, 1696. His will was probated December 14, 1696, in which he gave his wife Elizabeth the improvement of the house lands and mentioned sons and Elizabeth Adams. Joined the church the 10th. of February, 1662. His wife died July 14th., 1703.

THE MOULTON FAMILY

He had four children:

1. John, born in April, 1665.
2. Jonathan, born in 1666.
3. William.
4. Elizabeth.

John and Jonathan were executors. Amount of estate, two hundred and fifteen pounds, fifteen shillings and six pence.

THIRD GENERATION

JOHN MOULTON, FIRST, son of James Second. was born in 1665. He was married August 16, 1693 by Rev. Hale, of Beverly, to Sarah Conant, daughter of Lot and granddaughter of Roger Conant. (Beverly records, page 61.)

The above John Moulton first preambulated the boundry between Beverly and Wenham May, 1718. His estate amounted to three hundred and twenty-four pounds and seventeen shillings; administered on Dec. 18, 1728, by John Moulton and John Herrick. of Beverly. His children were:

1. Mary, born June 10, 1696, married John Bingham, December 6. 1721.
2. John, born October 1, 1698.
3. Abigail, born March 27, 1701.
4. Josiah, born July 16, 1703, died March 17, 1730.
5. Hannah, born Aprll 1, 1706, married Joseph Ayres February 25, 1737 or March 9, 1738.
6. Sarah, born August 29, 1709, married Moses May, 20th. of May, 1728.
7. Samuel, born October 19, 1710, married Sarah Fish, February 23, 1735.
8. Benjamin, born October 7, 1711, married Tabitha Howard, Ipswich, July 31, 1740.

THE MOULTON FAMILY

FOURTH GENERATION

JOHN MOULTON, Second, son of John First was born October 1, 1698. Gave notice of intentions to marry Mary Hannah Kilham, of Wenham, January 28, 1729. Married second time Sarah ——— who died January 3, 1744. Estate eighty-five pounds, four shillings and six pence. Administered December 8, 1755. (Pro. record 33, 1 to 9.) He signed a paper in 1720 requesting Rev. Ward to accept the call of the Wenham Church. Children:

1. Jonathan, born January 29, 1736.
2. John, all that is known of John is that he settled the estate of John Second.
3. Sarah, born January 5, 1732, married Bert John, NNE LL Divinall, of Topsfield, December 8, 1750.
4. Hannah, born April 27, 1735. Joined the church January 10, 1762.
5. Josiah, born October 31, 1739.

FIFTH GENERATION

JONATHAN MOULTON, son of John Second, was born January 29, 1736-7 and married May 21, 1760. He resided on the farm cleared by the first James, Billy Moulton. He married Mary Tarbox; born March 12, 1738, daughter of Deacon Samuel Tarbox of Wenham. He served as a sergeant in the Revolutionary war in Captain John Dodge's company, in a regiment commanded by Colonel Jacob Gerish. The warrant was dated June 2, 1778. He was a portly light complexioned man; "an excelent man but no driver"—John Conant. "A very clever man and a great joker." "A very even tempered man."—Hannah Friend and Betsey Hood. Said Dr. Dudley Dodge

THE MOULTON FAMILY

"I knew your grandfather well and a nice man he was too. He was a farmer and skipper of a fisherman. (?) I knew his sons John, Jonathan, Billy and the rest, seven of them."

Children:

1. Thomas, drowned in Salem harbor by the upsetting of a pleasure boat, aged 19 years.
2. John, born December 31, 1762.
3. Jonathan, born 1765.
4. Tarbox, born 1767.
5. Samuel.
6. Daniel.
7. Billy, born in 1775.

Children of Deacon Samuel Tarbox:

1. Mary, born March 12, 1738, married Jonathan Moulton.
2. Rebecca, born September 20, 1739, married Josiah Moulton.
3. Anna, born March 4, 1742, married Daniel Conant.
4. Eunice, born 1744, married George Raymond.
5. Susannah, married Samuel Raymond.
7. Lydia, born 1753, married Richard Hood.
8. Robert Cue, born 1746

(From History of the Tarbox Family.)

SIXTH GENERATION

CAPTAIN JOHN MOULTON was the second son of Jonathan, born December 31, 1762; married Miss Davison, of Wenham, June, 1785. She died March 27, 1788, leaving one son, John, born January 11, 1788, in Beverly. This son died at Kingston, Jamaica of yellow fever September, 1801, while acting as cabin boy for his father.

Captain John's second wife was Mrs. Sally Springer a cousin to his first wife, born 1761. Her maiden name was Sally Weber. She had previously married a Captain William Springer, an Englishman. She had one daughter, Sally, "Widow Oliver".

Children by second marriage:

1. William Springer, born October 23, 1796.
2. Charles, born July 16, 1799, died October 6, 1805.

His second wife died April 25, 1806, aged 45. Mary Bailey, his third wife, was born in Rowley, September 15, 1775. They were married July 22, 1808. Children by third marriage:

1. Augustus, born May 31, 1809.
2. Charles, born July 3, 1811.
3. John, born May 9, 1813, died January 16, 1814.
4. John, born September 26, 1814, died August 23, 1815.
5. Mary, born August 3, 1816, died February 4, 1817.
6. Eben Hobson, born February 14, 1818.

Captain John died of dysentery September 24, 1824.

Sketch of Life of Captain John Moulton.

When a lad he joined a party of boys who were skating on Wenham pond. Several fires were kindled and late in the evening a cat let loose by a boy, ran directly toward one of the fires and all of the boys gave chase. As the first person came near the fire, the weakened ice gave way and that one was drowned. The second in pursuit, John Moulton, turned as the water flowed round his feet and escaped. He never skated afterwards.

THE MOULTON FAMILY

When under fourteen years of age, though full grown, he was allowed to serve in the Revolutionary Army as a substitute for his father, who had been drafted soon after his discharge from a term of voluntary service and whose family and business had suffered from his absence from home. The young man served nine months on Long Island and the Jerseys. A part of the time he was under Washington. He was in the engagements on Long Island and at Brandywine. He suffered much from cold and hunger.

Afterwards he shipped with the noted privateer, Captain Hugh Hill, as cabin boy. On the first day out the Captain explained to him the names and uses of some parts of the rigging, but finding on the second day the boy had forgotten some things he had told him, he gave him a sound flogging ending with the remark; "there d—— ye, see if you will forget what the halyards are again." He did not forget.

At the close of the war he continued to go to sea; once he was wrecked on Cape Cod, losing everything but the clothes he stood in. Another time the ship in which he was returning from Europe foundered and the crew, taking to the boat, lived fourteen days on an allowance of two dates and a little water apiece per day.

Learning navigation in the fore-castle he rapidly rose to be a master marine. In that capacity he visited the principal places in the southern states and the West

THE MOULTON FAMILY

Indies; also Bristol, Havre, Bilboa, Lisbon, Oports and many of the Spanish, French and Italian ports of the Mediterranean Sea.

Before the passage of the embargo act, while on a voyage from the West Indies to Europe, he was captured by a vessel commanded by a Frenchman and bearing the French flag. He was carried into Havana where the ship and cargo were confiscated. He owned one-fourth of the ship and one-third of the cargo. All was lost.

After giving up a seafaring life he engaged in agricultural pursuits, "but while the merchant vessels of the Northeast were rotting at the wharfs", it was difficult for the most experienced to dig a living from a Wenham farm. His success in an almost untried business was not marked. He lost one thousand dollars by the failure of his brother Tarbox. He did not succeed in getting a pension for his service in the army, because the only man he could find who was in his company did not remember him. He failed to get recompence for his losses at Havana under the Spanish claim, because the Commissioners decided that the nationality of the ship that captured him was determined by the flag she bore. His last days were embittered by these losses and dissappointments and also by poverty and failing health. He died with dysentery September 10, 1824.

Personal appearance. He was five feet nine inches tall. Temperament, nervo-sanguine. Hair and beard at sixty-two, white. Aunt Grant, whose husband's first wife was a sister to John Moulton's first wife, said; "when he was a young man his hair was as red as a beet and his face was as red as his hair." His forehead was high; eyes large and blue and deep set; nose, large; figure, spare and rather stooping; gait, rolling and long strided. Though not a handsome man his general expression was calm, thoughtful, and kindly.

Acquirements. Though he had but few educational advantages, he was, in his own neighborhood, an authority in all matters relating to legal and business forms and usages. From extensive reading of history and books of travel, as well as from his own wanderings, he had learned much of the world and its inhabitants. He was one of the most active proprietors of the Wenham Library and among the library books, he enjoyed Addison, Swift and Sterns best.

He could read French readily and had some knowledge of Spanish and Portuguese. He excelled in figures. Aunt Grant said; "when he lived in Isaac Woodberry's house (R. N. Lee's) he taught a private school in Lower Beverly to instruct young men in arithmetic, geometry, navigation and surveying. "When chosen a member of the board of selectmen and assessors in Wenham, he usually did all the figuring and when not chosen he usually made the taxes for those that were."—Mary Moulton. Isaac Babson said; "I never knew anybody that could reckon in his head as quickly as Cousin John," their grandmothers were sisters, "he didn't have to reckon he could guess near enough. Once he came into the brickyard where I was at work and Uncle Francis asked him to guess how many bricks there were in the kiln, he walked to the end of the kiln, stood a moment, and I'll be darned if he didn't guess the number to a brick." "He was a Federalist in politics and in religion, though nominally orthodox, his views were liberal."—Anna Potter.

"He used tobacco freely but in eating and drinking he was very temperate."—Mary Moulton.

"In his younger days he was very quick tempered, but in after life he so far overcame this fault, that it was considered almost impossible to provoke him to anger."—Hannah Moulton, his brother's widow.

"I sailed with Captain Moulton two voyages as cook and he was the best man that I ever sailed with. He could'nt have treated me any better if I had been a white man."—Robert Arnold, of Beverly, a negro.

7. George, born 1820; stairbuilder, Boston.
8. Hannah, born 1822, married Bier, of Worcester, Massachusetts.
9. Abby, born 1824, died 1847.

SAMUEL MOULTON, removed to Lyman, Maine, when a young man. Married Jerusha Dodge, of Beverly. He was a carpenter and farmer; was tall, red-faced and possessed considerable energy. He was a Methodist, the only one of seven brothers that belonged to the church. Children:

THE MOULTON FAMILY

1. Jefferson, farmer and sheriff of York County, Maine.
2. Jerusha; dead.
3. Polly.
4. Charles, school teacher and farmer.

DANIEL MOULTON, lived on the old James Moulton homestead and took care of his mother. At her death he produced some legal document that gave him possession of the farm. His brothers, believing their mother had been unduly influenced, were indignant and he moved to Amherst, New Hampshire. He sold the farm to Colonel Paul Porter. He married first, Naomi Dodge, of Wenham and afterwards another wife in New Hampshire. In all he had twelve children, one of them was "Our Mutual Friend," Frank Moulton, of Brooklyn, New York.

BILLY MOULTON was a shoemaker, seaman and ship-master. He was large in size, florid in complexion, genial in disposition, an inveterate reader and tobacco chewer. He married Mary Lunt, of Newburyport and lived in Wenham, Beverly, Hamilton, Boston and Vermont. He died in Vermont at the residence of his daughter, Harriott, aged over eighty years.

Children:

1. Thomas, born in Beverly, November 1798
He was a mason. Died in Boston.
2. Catharine, born in Beverly, July 1800, died 1803.

THE MOULTON FAMILY

3. Charlotte, born in Wenham, married McAllister of Boston. Died there in 1879; left one son.
4. Harriot, married McAllister's brother and moved to V. L.
5. Elizabeth, married Blanchard and went to Ohio.
6. Louessa, married Kimball, a jeweler of Boston.
7. Samuel, born 1817 or '19. He was born in Wenham but at an early age removed to Hamilton where he was distinguished for scholarly traits. The school committee advised his father to take him out of school, not for any fault, but because in study he was in advance of his teacher. He served about three years in Boston to learn the harnessmakers trade, but having trouble with his employer, he left to seek his fortunes in the far west. When heard from he was teaching school in Kansas; he married there.

Studying between schools, he was admitted to the bar and soon afterwards was practicing in Vardalia, Illinois. He has been a member of the Legislature, Judge in the State's Courts and has served in Congress three terms.

As the dates of the death of John Moulton's first wife and of his marriage to his second are unknown, it would be doubtful whether the first or second woman was the mother of his children, were it not that tradition settled the doubt in favor of his first wife; at least in the case of Jonathan. It is known that Captain John Moulton and Billy Moulton both claimed to have Kilham blood in their veins; that Dr. Daniel Kilham when he visited Captain John, usually called him Cousin and that Dr. Kilham prior to 1824 gave Captain John a paper containing the geneology of the Moulton and Kilham families, showing their connection by marriage and the relationship between the two parties. This paper is lost but Billy Moulton, Mary Baily Moulton and William S. Moulton agree substantially in making these statements.

JOSIAH MOULTON married Rebecca Tarbox, a sister to his brother Jonathan's wife. She marked the date of her birth, 1739, on a sampler which is now in possession of Henry A. Moulton. of Wenham.

Josiah was shot just outside of Salem Harbor during the Revolutionary War, in an engagement between a letter of marque, on which he served, and a British frigate. A ball struck a jackknife in his pea-jacket pocket and drove that into his side. He died as he was landed on the wharf in Salem. (Traditional.) He left two daughters, Mary and Rebecca. Mary married Colonel Paul Porter. Rebecca married Deacon Nathaniel Kimball, both of Wenham. Mary was born 1775. Josiah was a blacksmith.

WILLIAM MOULTON, third son of the second James, was born in Wenham. His first wife, Mary, died March 3, 1694. He was married the second time to Jane Conant, daughter of Excise of Beverly, July 4, 1695. She was baptised in the First Church, June 20, 1675. They went to Windham, Connecticut with their father Excise but they afterwards came back to Ipswich, where he died 1763. Children:

1. William, born at Windham 1696; died same year.

THE MOULTON FAMILY

2. William, born at Windham November, 1697; husbandman.
3. James, born at Windham July, 1700; shoemaker.
4. Daniel, born at Ipswich January, 1703. Had two children, Sarah and Elizabeth.
5. Sarah, born at Ipswich January, 1705; married Jonathan Clinton.
6. Caleb, born at Ipswich, 1709; cooper.
7. Lucy, born at Ipswich, 1712.
8. Nathaniel, born at Ipswich, 1716, died in 1735.

Mary, the widow of the above William's brother Jonathan, died October 22, 1728.

SAMUEL MOULTON, second son of the first James, went to Wenham with his father; married Sarah —, November 30, 1665. He, with four others, were drafted from Wenham to service in the expedition against the Narragansetts in Rhode Island. He married the second time, Mrs. Elizabeth Glover, only daughter of Edward Norris, Clerk of Salem, in 1698. He lived in Rehoboth.

MARY MOULTON, daughter of the first James, married James Friend, of Wenham, son of John Friend, the first of that name in town, December 12, 1662.

EBENEZER MOULTON was expelled from the church in Brimfield, Massachusetts, for being a Baptist. He then commenced preaching the new doctrine, when he was arrested and put in jail for breaking the peace. Robert Moulton, his brother, sympathised with him and he was also expelled from the church, though he had served the town as Clerk, Selectman and Representative. This happened about 1730. (History of Brimfield.)

THE MOULTON FAMILY

THE TARBOX FAMILY.

The Tarbox name is supposed to come from the town of Tarbock, eight miles from Liverpool. Tarbock is a corruption of the Danish Thoro-beck or brook, from a little river that runs through the town. Some, however, think it is a Huguenot name from Tabaux or Tabeaux.

DEACON SAMUEL TARBOX, was born October 1, 1715, married Mary Cue, April 30, 1732. Elected deacon in 1760; died 1775. He lived in the last house in Wenham toward Topsfield and owned a large farm and one slave. He had five daughters; one married Richard Hood, two married Moultons, two others married Raymonds, brothers of Colonel John W. Raymond's great-grandfather. One of the Raymond brothers went to Lyman, Maine and the others lived in Beverly. Captain Thomas was a son and Mrs. Shadrock Fisk and William A. Foster's first wife were grand-daughters of Deacon Samuel Tarbox.

Colonel Paul Porter, who married Mary Moulton, the grand-daughter of Deacon Tarbox, handed down this saying of his: "having traveled all over the world, I am satisfied if a man can't get a living in Essex County, Massachusetts, he can't anywhere."

Rev. Increase N. Tarbox, President of the New England Genealogical Society and also the American Col. and Educational Society, furnished the following genealogy of the Tarbox Family, of Wenham.

JOHN TARBOX was in Lynn in 1639. He had two sons, Samuel and John. Samuel married first Rebecca Armatage, then Experience Look. By the first wife he had six children and by the second, twelve. One of the children by the second wife was Thomas Tarbox, born June 8, 1684. He married Esther Edwards, February 22, 1707. He lived in Wenham and was known as Captain Thomas; his father died in 1715 and his mother went to live with him in Wenham, where she died March 2, 1738, aged eighty-four years. Her gravestone with inscription stands near the entrance to the old Wenham burying ground. Captain Thomas had nine children: the second and fifth sons were deacons. Also Captain Samuel Tarbox, born October 1, 1715, died April 30, 1784, joined the church February, 10, 1738. Experience Look, born 1654, was the daughter of Thomas Look, of Lynn. Her family removed to Martha's Vineyard, where the name is common.

THE MOULTON FAMILY

Henry Herrick, second son of Henry, lived on the old homestead. He married first Lydia Woodbury, and in 1690, the Widow Giddings. He was a juror in the witch trials at Salem in 1692. Died 1702.

Mary Herrick, daughter of Henry, born July 20, 1700, died 1790. She married Robert Cue of Wenham, 1718. He died 1737 or '39. According to Dr. Herrick's Genealogy, she married Deacon Samuel Tarbox, of Wenham, April 20, 1737.

Sketches of the Lives of the Four Sons of Captain John Moulton

AS the direct descendents of the four sons of Captain John Moulton are the only ones that will care to read this little history of the family, we had purposed to secure character sketches of the four sons. We have not succeeded in getting as lengthy sketches as we wished, but we prefer to let them go in as they come to us rather than to supplement them with any considerable addition of our own, separated as our life has been from theirs.

From our boyish recollection of Augustus, Charles and Eben Moulton, they were the salt of the earth. They were the best representatives of the old Puritan stock then living. They were men with the courage of their convictions and when in the old town of Beverly back in the forties, there were but seven men who would stand up to be counted for the anti-slavery cause, three of them were my uncles.

WILLIAM SPRINGER MOULTON

William Springer Moulton was the eldest son of Captain John Moulton, of Wenham. He was raised on a farm. He received a good common school education for those days. Being of studious habits and endowed with a splendid memory, he made the most of his meager advantages. He also received an academic education at the old Mathuen Academy.

His mother was a devout member of the Baptist church and wished that her son should become a minister of that denomination. He desired to follow the sea, as his father and many others of his progenitors had before him. We presume that a compromise was effected, as he was put to learn the dyer's trade at the Lynn Dye House.

After securing his trade he became the agent for this dye house, then very noted, it being one of the largest in New England in the first half of the nineteenth century. While he was agent for the house, the first printing of calico ever done in the United States was done there.

From the dye house village of Lynn he went to Waterville, Maine, and began business there for himself. His dye house was washed away by a flood and he returned to Massachusetts and farmed for a time. He then engaged in milling at Danvers Port, then called Danvers New Mills. From there he returned to his trade, working in Salem and then engaged in business for himself in Charlestown. The evolution of industry in New England was fast eliminating this trade from among the profitable callings. The dye house, once a prime necessity in every town and village, has long since passed away.

From the dye house he returned to the farm and death found him engaged in the same occupation which he entered as a birthright.

He was an industrious man all his life. He was frugal in his habits, using no tobacco nor intoxicating liquors. Books and newspapers were his only indulgences. But he accumulated no wealth and died a poor man. He was devoted to his family and gave to them his best effort. Except when called away from his home by his business, he spent all his leisure hours at home. His passion was the pursuit of knowledge. He read everything, but science, history and philosophy were his favorite studies; poetry and fiction only engaged his attention when there was nothing else to read.

He served his town in almost every capacity. He was one of the town school committee for a term of years and a member of the board of selectmen. He was thoroughly informed in town affairs and in local history he was an oracle that was often consulted. He was employed by the town to rescue the old town record from oblivion, when it had become so dim from age that no one not familiar with it and thoroughly acquainted with the early history of the town and the old town names could make out what the faint tracings on the paper meant.

Although he wrote easily and pointedly, he never was able to express himself orally with satisfaction to himself, so his voice was seldom heard in town meetings except when appealed to for information.

He was a kind and considerate neighbor, a good nurse and always helpful in sickness. For years he filled the place in the simple life of his neighborhood, as its barber, undertaker and funeral director when death came to their homes.

His attitude toward the prevailing religious beliefs of his day was that of a skeptic. He rejected supernaturalism in all its forms. He accepted nothing that his intelligence and common sense did not approve. He called himself a "Nothing

Nearian." So far as the prevailing creeds of his day were concerned, this was doubtless true, but he had very positive convictions upon religious and philosophical questions. He was without cant or hypocrisy. He made no pretension to belief which he did not have; he simply lived his life according to his own convictions of right and wrong, and accepted without complaint the ostracism that the intolerant of his generation visited upon those who chose to make their own investigations and form their own conclusions.

He played no games, took part in no amusements, attended no meetings (except town meetings), belonged to no organization, mixed in no society and had no intimate associates. He was satisfied with himself, his ideals, his life, and did not attempt to escape the seclusion it brought him.

Individualism, the character of his race, was the dominant factor of his life. While it enabled him to build for himself a rugged and independent character, it limited his development and left the softer and better side of his nature dwarfed and inassertive.

In politics he was a Jeffersonian Democrat in his early life. He remained loyal to the party until after Jackson's administration. After that the dominating power of the slave holder in the party drove him to the anti-slavery cause and later to the Republican party.

He loved nature. It was his God. Its eternal and unchangeable law was his religion. He found more agreeable companionship with it than with men. He could not make a musical note, but he delighted in the songs of birds, the deep bass of the ocean and the rhythm of the forest moaning.

THE MOULTON FAMILY

He watched all of nature's changing moods.

He kept a diary from 1824 until his death in 1880, in which he recorded the weather, the direction of the wind and the marking of the thermometer; the appearance of the first bud of spring, the flight of birds, the growth of crops and the snows of winter.

His diary, before us as we write, closed with his life. He recorded with his own hand the approach of his death. We find written under the date of February 21st, 1880, after the record of the weather, the word "Sick." February 24th he writes "Sicker." February 25th he writes again the word "Sicker." February 26th he writes "Sick—too sick to keep this account any longer."

He died February 28th, 1880. Thus ended his diary and his life.

AUGUSTUS MOULTON

Augustus Moulton was born in Wenham, Massachusetts, May 31, 1809. He received his education in the schools of that town. About the year 1825 he removed to Beverly. He was a great reader and lover of books and had an excellent memory. He never sought public office, but he served the town as selectman in the trying times of the Civil War with credit to himself and the town. He was interested in the anti-slavery movement from the first, and later a firm believer in the prohibition cause.

He never joined any church, but attended the Orthodox Congregational Church of New Beverly. He could never accept its creed. The Golden Rule was a sufficient revelation of the will of God for him and he conformed his life to its teachings to the end.

THE MOULTON FAMILY

He died at Beverly October 31st, 1886, aged seventy-seven years, honored and respected.

CHARLES MOULTON

The following clipping from a Beverly paper sent us soon after the death of Charles Moulton, will serve as a brief sketch of his life. As we remember him it is far too modest and incomplete to do justice to his life and the place that he made for himself in the community in which he lived.

We remember him as an uncompromising abolitionist and also as a member of the Baptist Church and one of its most active workers. But this sketch does not mention this connection and so our statement must be taken with a liberal grain of allowance.

Charles Moulton, a respected and honored citizen of Beverly, died at his home in Cabot street, April 11th, 1901, at the age of eighty-nine years nine months and seven days. Mr. Moulton had been sick for some time and the end was not unexpected, although all that skilled physicians and the tender care of his immediate family could do for him was done.

Mr. Moulton was one of the few men left us of the old school who were thoroughly honest, upright and consistent in all their walks of life. He was a strong advocate of temperance, joining the Sons of Temperance in 1846 and continuing with the organization as long as it was in existence.

He was identified with the Prohibition party from its inception and was at one time the nominee of the party for state senator and several times a candidate for the lower branch, standing for principle rather than expecting to be elected.

THE MOULTON FAMILY

He was a butcher and dealer in pork, cattle and poultry during the active years of his life, and his was a familiar figure in the old Derby market in Salem for years.

He was at one time a member of the board of selectmen and was always interested in the welfare of his town and city and his voice was frequently heard in town meetings, advocating things which he thought were of benefit to the community.

EBEN HOBSON MOULTON

Eben Hobson Moulton was born February 14th, 1818, in Wenham. After the death of his father he, with his mother and brothers, moved to North Beverly, where he resided until his death.

He was very fond of reading and studying and at one time, when quite a young man, taught school. In 1842 the young men of North Beverly formed a debating society, of which he was elected president. He wrote many articles, both prose and poetry, which were greatly enjoyed by his friends, and was a contributor to the "Liberator" and other periodicals.

He married in 1846 Irene Conant, daughter of John Conant and a direct descendant of Roger Conant.

He was identified with the anti-slavery cause, voting with the abolitionists, and in 1838 he was instrumental in starting a free anti-slavery library in North Beverly. He was interested in the temperance cause, being himself a total abstainer from liquor in all forms.

He was a trustee of the Beverly Public Library for a term of years and served the town for many years as a member of the school committee. He was a Unitarian and always attended the services of that church. When his minister preached his funeral sermon he spoke of him as one of the best men in his parish and one who had helped him by his example and counsel as much as anyone in his church.

He died November 19th, 1894, at the age of seventy-six.

Honorable Henry P. Moulton

AT a meeting of the members of the bar of Essex and Suffolk Counties, held at Salem April 28th., 1905, for the purpose of paying their tribute to the memory of Henry P. Moulton, the following memorial was adopted. Several speeches followed the reading of the memorial address among which was one of Justice Loring of the Supreme Judicial Court, which paid a very high tribute to the deceased as a man and a lawyer.

Mr. Moulton was born in Beverly and his life work was done in Essex county, and there he always resided. He was of Puritan ancestry. He was a lineal descendant in the eighth generation of James Moulton, who was born in England in 1602. James was a member of the church and a freeman in Salem in 1637. In 1646 he lived in Wenham, where at the first town meeting he was chosen granary-man. He was also a deacon of the Wenham church. Henry Percy received his early education in the common schools. He attended the district school in Beverly and entered the Beverly high school, being a member of the first graduating class. From the high school he entered Amherst College in 1861 and graduated with his class in 1865. In college he was a diligent and conscientious student. He was also a great reader of general literature, and while this may have detracted somewhat from his rank in scholarship, it broadened his mind, rounded out and developed his character, and bore an important part in fitting him for his professional career. Early in his college life he determined to make law his profession, and that object was always distinctly before him. Lack of means compelled him to make many sacrifices in order to complete his college course, and he was one of the few students who boarded themselves; but self-denial came easily to him and he never complained, but was always jovial and buoyant and confident of the future. He was loved by his classmates and respected by all, and those who knew him best and appreciated his sturdy attainments early predicted for him future success in his chosen profession. After graduating from college he studied law for three years, which was then the usual time devoted by students to preparation for entering the profession. Upon completion of his studies he was admitted to the bar in 1868 and immediately entered upon practice in Essex county. At that time the Essex bar contained many able and brilliant members, and it was not easy for the young practitioner to make headway and the race was a strenuous one. Mr. Moulton, however, soon began to take place and position at the bar, and to be recognized as a real force and as one of the surely coming men. He early acquired the confidence of people and popularity and was chosen to the legislature from Beverly as early as 1870, and served through the winter of that year, but his political career was brief and apparently not to his taste, and he returned with renewed vigor to the exclusive practice of his profession. He constantly gained in the estimation of the bar and the bench as a lawyer, and in the confidence of those who were concerned in litigation, and without break or interruption advanced until he stood in the very forefront of the legal profession of Essex county and the commonwealth; and for a long period preceding his death he was probably concerned, on one side or the other, in the majority of the important cases in Essex county.

In 1882 he was appointed district attorney for Essex county and served one term in that capacity, bringing to the office the same untiring industry, conscientious service and unquestioned integrity that had always characterized his general practice. His service as district attorney did not interfere with his general practice, which seemed to grow instead of diminish as a consequence of his holding this office, and upon his retirement from office he was better known, more largely trusted and his service more in demand.

During the administration of Mr. McKinley he was appointed United States district attorney, and was holding that office at the time of his death, performing all the duties of his position and at the same time carrying the burden of a large and extensive general practice. For six years he was president of the Essex Bar Association, and it was only at his earnest request that his brethren excused him from further service. He was frequently mentioned as a candidate for high office, and undoubtedly could have had a place upon the bench had he so chosen, but his love for his profession, both for itself and the honorable reward that it brought him, deepened as his life advanced, and he remained true to its service.

He married Harriet E. Stocker of Beverly, who survives him, as also four children—Edith Foster Moulton, who is a graduate of Lasell Seminary;

THE MOULTON FAMILY

Susy Pressey Moulton, a graduate of the Salem High School and of Smith College, Northampton; Henry Philip Moulton, who was a student of Amherst College, with a special course at Harvard, and is now a teacher; John Richard Moulton, a graduate of the Salem High School and of Yale College, now pursuing the study of law at Harvard Law School.

It is not fitting in a memorial, perhaps, to speak too closely of a deceased brother's private and home life, nor would we in any way invade the sanctity that surrounds the name of home, but the beauty and simplicity of our deceased brother's home life were known to all. Too much of it cannot be said; too little of it had best not be said at all. In contradistinction to the common aphorism that one should not take home his business cares and troubles, but should leave them behind him at the office or the counting room, Brother Moulton took them home with him and had ever the benefit of the loving and interested advice of his wife and the absorbing sympathy of the children. Mrs. Moulton had a very clear and accurate knowledge of his business affairs and after his death she clearly showed a keen appreciation of the characteristics of the different members of the bar that had been associated with her husband, and that could only have come from a most intimate detail of the relations of her husband to the business in which he was concerned and to his brethren at the bar.

Perhaps the chiefest of the stimuli of the activity of his life was the desire for the welfare of his home; the comfort and happiness of the partner of his joys and sorrows; the desire that his children should have all the advantages and chances for success and happiness that might come to them from the highest and best education and culture which the institutions of the country could afford, and in the promise of their future lives, it can be truly said that "his works live after him."

Speaking of him simply as a member of the bar, and as an associate of us, his fellow toilers in the profession, who today meet in sadness to render some tribute to his memory, it may, in a word, be said that he died at his post. One of his intimate friends has said that when he became aware of the fatal character of the disease that was fastening itself about his life, and when hope of final recovery had gone, he said that he had made up his mind to die in the harness, and die in the harness he did, in the midst of a long and laborious contest at the bar. Fully equipped for his work, shirking no duty and rendering to his government the benefit of every power and every attainment with which his life's work had equipped him, dying, not in apprehension or regret, but with the light of battle still upon his face. His end was sudden and unexpected. We cannot but feel that it was untimely. It was as though a great battleship, fully armed and equipped and with decks cleared for action, had foundered in mid-ocean.

Such is the simple story of a simple life. Its field of activity was the office and the court house; its unfailing source of happiness—the home. It might well be left there. Words cannot add to our admiration or deepen our lasting remembrance.

But it is in accord with long custom that we leave behind our dead brother some estimate of his character as a lawyer, and a man that, perchance, in after years some beginner searching the records of this court may find inspiration from his example, his worth, his characteristics, his labor, and take courage to travel the pathway that lies before him.

Mr. Moulton came to the bar well equipped for its work. He possessed a strong and rugged physique, an industry that knew no fatigue; hard common sense, a keen perception and quick grasp of facts, with the power to make from them close and logical deductions. His mental faculties were well disciplined and under good control. Above all he had a genuine love for his profession and was eager to engage in its contests. Among his chief attributes which became manifest after the commencement of his active practice were the capacity and willingness to work. Hard work with his books; hard work with the facts of the cases that came to him; hard work in court in the presentation of his case—these were the orders of the day for him and the orders for every day. His labor was unremitting. He took everything that came to him in the way of litigation, and seemed to have no choice of clients. The first person who came to his office to secure his services was the one who secured them. Even after success had come to him, and the years of middle life had fallen upon him, and when he could well have shifted to other shoulders something of what we call the burden of drudgery of the profession, his work knew no relaxation. Many of those who knew him best felt that in the latter years of his life he could easily have taken fewer cases and perhaps been more choice in their selection without detriment in his standing as a lawyer or the income he received. Had he done this his life might have been prolonged. He might have been with us today. But this course was not for him. He was determined, even in the face of warnings of the encroachment of disease, to work to the last, and work he did to the very last day of his life. But perhaps he was happier so, for he seemed to love labor for labor's sake; at least this is the consoling thought. Mr. Moulton was an aggressive man; always ready for the fray, seeming to rejoice when the conflict was on and never shirking a fight. He was not much given to compromise and settlement. Confident of his facts and believing in his case, he was willing to stake the issue upon the verdict of the jury or the ruling of the court. But he was a fair fighter. His opponent need not fear tricks or surprises. He never distorted evidence or resorted to the by-play and artifice that sometimes exert no small influence in a jury trial. He knew but one side of a case and that was his side. But strong and persistent fighter that he was, his contests never developed bitterness or vindictiveness. He was always considerate of opposing counsel, ready to oblige and grant all reasonable and fair requests. He never insisted upon matters of form or non-essentials. After thirty-five years of practice he left behind him no enemy in the profession, and no one was nearer the hearts of his brethren.

In the trial of cases to the jury he was very successful, largely through his native force of character. He put his own personality into his case. He was so earnest and so thoroughly believed in his case that it was easy to make the jury believe in it. He had great power in seizing upon the important and turning facts of a case, making them prominent, dwelling upon them, almost hammering them into the minds of the jury. Simple-ity, directness and force characterized his addresses to juries. There was in them little of the orator's art, little of the play of imagination, of appeal to feeling and passion; little of the grace and polish of finished oratory. On the other hand, their reasoning and logic were admirable. Generally we may say they were convincing rather than persuasive; forceful rather than appealing. Above all, like everything that Mr. Moulton did and said, they were fair, open and honest. They contained no misstatements of evidence; no twisting of facts; no subtle and unworthy insinuation; rarely an appeal to sympathy; never to prejudice. The purpose of Mr. Moulton in his remarks to juries seems to have been to present an array of facts upon which he relied, and by repetition and insistence to ground them in the mind of the juror, and then draw the logical and inevitable conclusion and force it home. In doing this he had few equals. He wielded the battle-axe with great power, but had little use for the rapier. In dealing with questions of law, he had sound judgment, and stated legal propositions clearly and concisely. He was not specially a book or case lawyer, but he had a fine conception of the principles of law, and readily applied them to the facts. His knowledge of decided cases was helped by his remarkable memory, but he remembered what had been somewhere decided, rather than the name of the case or the volume in which the decision was to be found. His opinion upon a question of law was quickly formed, and even when given off-hand and without study was generally well supported. In the argument of questions of law before the supreme court he had the same direct and forceful way of presentation as in dealing with facts before the jury. When once he was grounded upon a proposition of law in which he believed, he held to it with great tenacity, and strove to secure its endorsement by the court with the same repetition and assistance as that with which he hammered an array of facts into the mind of a jurymen.

Mr. Moulton had an unusually large practice before other tribunals than the courts, and was frequently before committees of the legislature, representatives of city and town governments, the county commissioners and like bodies. Here oratory is generally at a discount, appeals out of place, mere adroitness in the management of a case, or skill in examination and cross-examination of witnesses of little value. The marshalling and presentation of material facts, plain, logical reasoning, just and fair conclusions, simply urged, win the day. Here he was very successful. His power in dealing with facts, his direct and positive speech, his belief in his cause, stood him in good stead, greatly aided, as he was, by his unassuming and democratic ways, and possessing, as he did, the confidence of men. He had no specialty in the law and was always ready to take up the work offered, wherever and whatever the forum might be. He was frequently in the criminal court, and he engaged in criminal practice to a later period in life than is usual with lawyers. He was, while at the bar, as in college, in constant touch with the general literature of the past and of the day, and found solace in the lighter English and French productions. He remembered what he read, and his mind was filled with the best things that had been written and were being written.

But the storehouse of his mind in this regard was opened only to his friends, or to those who were fortunate enough to engage him in conversation socially and in the leisure hour, and then he was charming. The anecdote, the incident, the aphorism, the apt quotation, the witty repartee, the keen thrust at the weaknesses and foibles of humanity, were all there. With such an overflowing source from which to draw, surprise was often expressed that he did not use more ornament and flower of speech in his addresses to juries; more of illustration, quotation, simile and figure of rhetoric. He was once asked the reason for this, and replied that his mind was so concentrated upon the facts he was striving to bring out and enforce, that he had no thought for anything else; that he was so absorbed in the salient issues of the case, that all else was for the time banished from his mind. The trial of a case was a serious matter to him. His pathway to the juror's mind was hard, cold facts and merciless logic, and nothing could swerve him from it.

But whatever may be said in the attempt to leave upon the records some estimate of our brother's characteristics as a lawyer, that he was a power with Essex county juries all concede. He had many sources of strength outside of what he said and did at the trial of a cause. He was a man of Essex. His ancestors were men of Essex. His robust form and striking presence were known to all. His sturdy character and blameless life were known to all. His interest in all that made for the welfare of Essex he had demonstrated. He had the confidence of all. It may well have been said that as he stood before twelve Essex county jurymen, they felt as if one of their own number were speaking to them; one whom they could trust and were willing to follow. One who would not wittingly deceive them; one who had some right to command and direct them; one who could not, by unfair means, seek to lead them to an unrighteous verdict. The personality of a lawyer trying a jury case is a potent factor for success or failure; perhaps not so much today as in the past, but in Brother Moulton's day it has played no unimportant part on many a well fought field.

His devotion to his profession did not narrow him. He was always public spirited, interested in all that concerned the welfare of the state and citizen. He held pronounced views upon political and economic questions; had strong political affiliations and was loyal to his party. Nor did his laborious life and success and promotion at the bar dwarf his manhood. Simplicity and truth were at the foundation of his makeup. He was a real man. He dealt with realities. What he seemed, that he was, and that he wished always to be. He despised sham, conceit and pretense. To the weaker or younger brother at the bar he was ever considerate and kindly, but to the braggart, the blusterer and the pretender he was uncompromising in his hostility. He never worshipped at the footstool of wealth or prestige, and was incapable of fawning or flattery. All the prizes of his life had been fairly won in open, honorable contest, and for those obtained in other ways he had scant regard, no matter who the possessor might be. He had no jealousy or envy of the advancement of others, and rejoiced when a brother had fought his way to fame and fortune. He never sought his own success by pulling another down. The covert sneer or secret insinuation, by which character and opportunity are often sought to be destroyed, were strangers to his lips. As he hated sham, so for the show and parade and theatricals of the profession he had nothing but contempt. He was simple in his tastes, democratic in his ways, modest and unassuming. Truly a noble character has gone from us. As that familiar presence fades from view a notable figure at the bar disappears. A leader falls. There is a vacancy in our councils and a void in our hearts that can never be filled.

Probably what shall be said here today will be the last public words spoken of our brother who has gone from us. May they be just to him. May they express our love for him as he was in life and will ever be in memory, and our admiration for his abilities and character. Above all, may they be such as he himself would approve could they penetrate the ear of death. The ranks of those who came to the bar with him are thinning rapidly. The gray head and the furrows left by old conflicts mark them as they discharge the daily duties of the profession. A few more years and their voices will be heard in this court room no more forever. One of the ablest, bravest and truest has gone a little before. That his memory may to some extent, at least, be exempt from the oblivion which the evanescent fame of the lawyer makes almost inevitable, they unite today with the younger brethren, and with one accord respectfully ask that this memorial may have a place upon the records of the court.
